Portfolio Comments

Volatility in world asset prices continued throughout the month of July. The month saw world oil and broader commodity prices decline which had a positive effect on world equity prices as the market anticipated weaker demand finally translating into lower, medium term inflationary pressures.

The domestic market experienced a complete "reversal of fortunes" with interest rate sensitive stocks (banks, retailers and the property sector) showing significant outperformance over the resource heavyweights. Fixed interest instruments also benefitted greatly from the reduction in the oil price with the All Bond Total Return Index up 8% for the month and the JSE Real Estate Index up over 18%.

The diversification and risk management strategies employed have ensured the portfolios delivered adequate performance relative to benchmark with significant lower levels of risk. The overweight inflation linked bonds and cash relative to property has detracted from performance while the underlying equity managers all added value relative to the JSE All Share Index.

We remain concerned about the levels of inflation experienced domestically (as confirmed by the June CPI figure coming in higher than forecasted) and therefore continue to hold the overweight inflation-linked bond position and underweight domestic property. We furthermore believe that an active approach to domestic equities is required given the continued sectoral rotation being experienced.
